When will there be a giant leap?

For the past several years, major players in the illuminating industry have been working on what is likely to be the next giant leap in light production: OLED lighting. Experts agree that OLED is promising enough to redefine many present day lighting solutions. In the office, the ceilings may no longer be illuminated with strip lighting, but will be replaced by large area luminous ceilings. At home, OLED designer laminates will also be used for a completely new kind of comfort. Furthermore, applications that are still unthinkable today will come along. In light planning offices, thought is already being given to transparent room dividers or separating walls which dispense light as required. It will even be possible to integrate OLED lighting into furniture in future.

A huge potential growth area ahead, Taiwan-based manufacturers have prepared to outflank competitors. For example, the local flat panel maker AUO invested in the field a while ago. According to the company, its LED maker subsidiary Lextar launched OLED lighting panels powered from built-in Lithium-ion batteries and has a magnet on the pack so it can attach to metallic objects. The panels are 3.7 mm thick and include a 3-section dimmer. Also, it showed a concept "OLED Wall Brick" built from red, blue and yellow OLED modules that can change color depending on one's mood and location. Moreover, AUO plans actively to build an OLED lighting patents and technology to open up future revenue pipeline given the dim economic prospect. By entering the OLED lighting market to reduce the panel shipments in the same time, AUO hopes to make better use of capacity, so high and the margin requirements for position OLED lighting to see pretty blue ocean.

The other aggressive domestic player Chunglwa Picture Tubes Ltd (CPT) started a small amount of production of OLED lighting in the second quarter of 2012 to overcome the OLED illumination uniformity, high production costs, luminous efficiency, lifetime and other technical shackles before it shipped hundreds of pieces per month OLED lighting panel to test the market temperature. According to a senior executive, the company considered the OLED lighting market is room for a huge marketing budgets and brand maturity, short-term CPT will not have to develop its own brand of OLED lighting plan.

Cost issue

As OLED lighting has been receiving much attention due to the potential of the technology for unique designs and cheap devices, however, there are concerns. According to analysts and industry makers, OLED lighting is the most criticized is too expensive, light-emitting efficiency is low and the short life of the shortcomings, this is closely related with the OLED lighting materials. It is expected to cut a price from from $18/m today to $0.71/m on glass and $0.18/m on flexible substrates in 2020. Despite this dramatic price improvement, OLED will continue to lag other lighting technologies on price, and therefore will only command a $58 million 2020 market share with this price drop.

New applications that take advantage of OLED's unique properties – such as flexibility and transparency – while absorbing a high price are required for initial OLED growth, and OLED will remain a minor player in lighting until such applications are uncovered. For the sake, it is believed that the future will have a LED and OLED lighting market position of the segment. OLED lighting will be locked in the high-end niche market, although the market is small but high-profit while the LED lighting market will occupy the important position of the mainstream. ☺
